Disability Claims Among Women Shot Up 55% After Rollout of COVID Vaccines

Financial analyst and data expert Edward Dowd said in new U.S. Department of Labor disability survey data employed men and women ages 21-64 reported record claims since February 2021, which is negatively correlated with COVID-19 vaccine uptake.

Last week, the report the historic rise in excess U.S. deaths and disabilities in his book, "Excess Unfettered: The Epidemic of Sudden Deaths in 2021 and 2022," Unlimited Hangout and other mainstream media. He issues statistics-rich reports on everything from excess mortality and fertility to U.S. and U.K. disabilities, reported the new U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics monthly disability survey results last month on X (formerly Twitter).

The Department of Labor survey data was issued in graph form by FRED, the acronym for Federal Reserve Economic Data, an online database of hundreds of thousands of interactive data series maintained by the Research Division at the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis.

The monthly report is a survey of respondents self-identifying as disabled and not a claim for disability and money compensation, Dowd said.

But the government's disability survey is an important statistical window into U.S. health, Dowd said. "Morbidity leads to mortality," he said.

"The data is confirmation that the trend of rising U.S. disability as measured by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics is a continuation of the trend I've observed."

"The rise began in earnest in February of 2021, and we have added about 4 million Americans to the vaccination rollout," he said. "The civilian labor force, employed men and employed women had had a steeper rise than the general population. Unless this trend is reversed it will compromise the labor force."

Dr. James Thorp, a Florida obstetrician and gynecologist who documented catastrophic harm to mothers and children from the COVID-19 mRNA vaccines, said he was outraged by the unrelenting practice of excess deaths and disability in the U.S. population and the greater victimization of women in the wake of the vaccine rollout.

He pointed to the Pfizer 5.3.6 post-marketing data, part of the 450,000 pages of Pfizer's internal reports on mRNA vaccine damage in the first 10 weeks of rollout, Dec. 14, 2020, to Feb. 28, 2021.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) tried to keep the Pfizer documents from the public for 75 years, but a judge ordered their release.

Table 1 of the Pfizer report shows the cumulative total of "adverse event reports" and "presents the main characteristics of the overall cases." It shows that of 42,086 "relevant cases" of adverse events after being injected with Pfizer's mRNA vaccine, 1,223 cases — 2.9% — died.

The table also shows that Pfizer reported adverse events, including deaths, in 29,314 women and 9,182 men — a ratio of harm 3 times greater for women. Thorp said. He frames the disparity in data points on the tendency of women to make a family's health decisions and the likelihood that women rushed out to get the vaccine before persuading men to do so.

Pfizer's adverse events record also showed the mRNA COVID-19 vaccine caused injuries at a rate, relative to deaths, far beyond those caused by diseases, with an astonishing survivorship ratio of 34 to 1, Thorp said.

Thorp, a disabled veteran honorably discharged from the U.S. Air Force, said he believes such a dramatic ratio of injuries to deaths is unheard of in the history of modern warfare or medicine, where typically the ratio of injuries to deaths caused by COVID-19 and other diseases hovers around 3 to 1.

The COVID-19 mRNA vaccines are "the deadliest vaccine-medicine-drug ever rolled out in the history of medicine," he said.

Asked what disabilities are most common according to the Pfizer reports Thorp said, "We don't have time for that. More than 1,500 types of injuries" were documented in the Pfizer reports.

Amy Kelly, DailyClout chief operating officer and spokesperson for the War Room/DailyClout Pfizer Documents Analysis Project, said the new disability data offers more clues to the "disappearance of American workers."

"Even if a working-aged person isn't vaccinated, the fear of he or she has a vaccine-injured loved one and needs to leave the workforce to be a caregiver?" Kelly asked.

It's hard to even fathom the potential scope given the percentage of U.S. citizens who have been COVID-vaccinated or boosted.

The key findings from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics data, according to Dowd:

- More than 1 million working women in the U.S., ages 16-64, have become disabled since the COVID-19 vaccine rollout, Dowd said. Women, he said, Employed women in the U.S. who tell the Labor Department they are disabled rose an unprecedented 55% from 2.1 million women in February 2021, when Dowd first spotted the trend, to 3.2 million women in November 2023.
- Employed men and women ages 16-64 suffered a greater rise in disabilities than the general population ages since the widespread mandating of the mRNA vaccines — an unprecedented reversal of industry-wide insurance data that insurance experts cannot explain, as employed Americans have historically been healthier than the general U.S. population. Dowd said the evidence strongly suggests the reversal was caused by nationwide vaccine mandates for working people.
- Approximately 600,000 more Americans ages 16 and over, employed or not, said they were disabled in November, while some 139,000 more Americans ages 16 and over in the civilian labor force said they were disabled, Dowd said. It had a disability.
- "The bad news is that it appears the breakout in June for the U.S. population 16 and over is holding," Dowd said. In February 2021, when Dowd first noticed the rapid escalation of disability data, 5,961 Americans ages 16 and over said they had a disability. The number increased to the August high of 6,161 and remained elevated at 6,153 in October. The number dropped to 6,096 in November, but the trend of an unprecedented rise in disabilities is holding, Dowd said.
- Americans are getting sicker at unheard-of rates and the sick are dying at unheard-of rates, Dowd said, in an earlier study covering December 2021 to December 2022. Dowd found "an increase of about 1,400,000 disabilities in the civilian labor force aged 16-64, while there were about 300,000 excess deaths over the 2015-19 average," Dowd said in November.
- Using Labor Department disability statistics, CDC vaccination data, and United Nations population estimates for the period from 2021 to December 2022, Dowd found "clear evidence of a strong relationship between the Covid-19 vaccination rollout and increases in disability."

"We must always consider other external factors that might explain the rise in disabilities, and which are also correlated to the vaccination data," Dowd said. "This is usually stated as 'correlation is not causation.'"

"However, in the absence of other explanatory factors, and strong medical evidence of the vaccines causing injuries and deaths, we must consider the relationship seriously," he said.

Kelly said the U.S. is witnessing "just the beginning of the vaccine fallout. Babies, toddlers, and children have been vaccinated and boosted. I got an email today from a woman whose doctor pushed her to get vaccinated when she was four months pregnant. She miscarried that baby and has since had two more miscarriages. Sadly, I receive emails similar to that all the time."

Dowd said he remains hopeful. "Insurance companies are seeing a rise in long-term disability claims," he said. "That will come out over time. The establishment is spinning nonsense at this point."
